

Chandos Internet Series

Digital Information Culture:

The individual and society in the digital age

Luke Tredinnick

CHANDOS PUBLISHING

Contents

About the author	xi
Prologue	xiii
Part I: Culture and technology	1
1 The meaning of culture	3
Reflexivity, performativity and culture	3
Aspects of culture	6
Culture and the mythopoeic	16
Notes	19
2 Representations of technology	21
Change in the digital age	21
Representations of technology	26
Representations and reality	36
Notes	38
3 Narratives of technology and culture	39
Narrative structures	39
Forms and imagery	44
Historicising culture and technology	49
Narratives and personal experience	52
Notes	55
Part II: Digital information culture	57
4 Textuality	59
Textuality prior to print	59
The transition to print	64

	Digital textuality	68
	The social text	71
	Text and context	73
	The unstable nature of digital text	75
	Notes	77
5	Authenticity	79
	The work of art in the age of digital reproduction	79
	Authentication and culture	81
	Cultural granularity and bricolage	88
	Digital authenticity	92
	Notes	95
6	Knowledge	97
	Fractured truths and declining authority	97
	Fractured truths	99
	Information saturation	102
	Disintermediation and remediation	105
	Participatory culture and knowledge	107
	Coming to knowledge in the digital age	113
	Notes	115
7	Power	117
	Power and discourse	117
	Preconditions of participation	120
	Participation and power	124
	The structure of digital discourse	126
	Power anxieties	130
	Notes	134
8	Identity	135
	The nature of identity	135
	Disintermediation and digital identity	137

Sedimentation, virtualisation and fragmentation	140
Identity crisis	144
Notes	147
9 Memory	149
Digital preservation	149
The digital dark ages	153
Versions of history	156
Memory in the digital age	160
The new historicity	164
Notes	166
Epilogue: culture and tradition	167
References	169
Index	187